Westminster Learning Disability Partnership

“Our aim is to help adults with a learning disability keep safe, healthy and active in the community”
What is a learning disability?

A learning disability:

› People with a learning disability find it harder to learn, but they can do so with help from other people.

› People usually have a learning disability from birth or sometimes from early childhood.

› People with learning disabilities are not all the same. They have different needs, come from all kinds of families and have varied lives.

What is Westminster Learning Disability Partnership?

Westminster City Council and Central London Community Healthcare work together to provide their adults learning disability services.

Westminster Learning Disability Partnership carries out assessments of eligibility. Please contact the psychology team for further information about assessments.
